Concept in one line

An operator who already runs a couple of businesses uses the free ZenBusiness Velo app to pressure-test a brand new idea he has never pulled the trigger on, walking through the exciting early phase: is the idea real, what would it cost, and what do I name it. The product just happens to be what is on screen. It does not read like an ad.

We lead with the dreamer pain ("the number one reason people never start their business") and let Velo clear the path. We never lead with LLC formation or filing. We stay on the initial spark: ideation, cost, naming.

Hooks (filming BOTH for the A/B test)

Hook A (30-second version):

"The number one reason most people never start their business? They never find out if the idea's even real. So I let this free app, ZenBusiness Velo®, pressure-test one I've been sitting on for months."

Hook B (15-second cut):

"This free app, ZenBusiness Velo®, takes any business idea and tells you what to name it, what it'll cost, and if it'll actually make money. Watch what it did with mine."

Both name ZenBusiness Velo inside the first 5 seconds and both emphasize that it is free.

Full script (Hook A version, ~30 seconds)

The number one reason most people never start their business? They never find out if the idea's even real. So I let this free app, ZenBusiness Velo, pressure-test one I've been sitting on for months.

[SCREEN - Velo chat, typing the idea in]

I didn't even need to make an account. I just typed in the idea, a mobile matcha cart, and asked if it was actually worth doing.

[SCREEN - concept and numbers generating]

And look, it's not giving me generic AI fluff. It built the actual concept, a revenue model, and what it'd cost me to start. I didn't ask twice.

[ON CAMERA]

This is the part that got me. That cost number is the thing that's stopped me for a year.

[SCREEN - naming tool running real-time checks]

Then it named the thing for me and checked, live, if the name was even available, the domain, the trademark, all of it.

[SCREEN - download blueprint]

And it pulled the whole thing into a blueprint I can download. That's the free version. All it wanted was an email.

[ON CAMERA]

Anyway, it's ~~ZenBusiness~~ Velo, it's actually free, go let it pressure-test whatever idea's been sitting in your notes app. Download the app to start your custom Blueprint. Link's right there.

___ Note: "a mobile matcha cart" is a placeholder example and will be swapped for Cooper's real idea before filming so the reaction is genuine.

15-second cut: Hook B, then type the idea, then the concept and cost reaction, then "it's free, go try it." Drops the naming and blueprint beats.

I've had this idea sitting in my notes for a year. ZenBusiness Velo® pressure-tested the whole thing, the concept, the cost, and the name, in about two minutes. And it's free.
